Allon article annoys Rabin, angers Likud

Jerusalem Post Staff

Foreign Minister Yigal Allon's publication of his "Allon Plan" in fairly precise detail in "Foreign Affairs" magazine has annoyed the Prime Minister, angered the Opposition, and provoked some criticism from one leading dove.

Allon himself, in a television interview at the weekend, explained that his article had not been intended as an official and comprehensive Israeli peace plan, but rather, as its title implied, as an articulation of "The Case for Defensible Boun*daries." Some of Israel's friends* believed that strategic depth was no longer important in this missile age, Allon explained. Others felt it could be substituted by political guarantees. His aim had been to point out their errors.

The Foreign Minister acknowledged that he had not "cleared" the article with Premier Rabin before publication. There had been no need to do so, he said, since the article in effect defended authorised government policies, and he had therefore been fully within his rights to write it.

The Premier is understood to have taken exception to Allon's publishing the article without discussing it first. While the article's content is not new — it rehashes the "Allon Plan" first conceived in July, 1967 — the fact that the For*eign Minister has* "gone public" with it at this time is bound to arouse interest around the world.

The article is expected to be discussed at today's Cabinet meeting, when Allon briefs ministers on the upcoming UN General Assembly. Allon flies to New York this week.

If asked, the Premier will not hide his displeasure at Allon's surprise publication. Allon for his part will defend his action, and will cite the very wide news coverage that the article has received as proving its value in Israel's informational effort.

The Likud, meanwhile, has decided to summon the Knesset into special session to debate the Allon article. Faction chairman Moshe Nissim told The Post the formal application would be made today.

Ironically, Allon himself will presumably be abroad when the House meets and thus Rabin, as acting Foreign Minister, will be required to speak on his behalf.

Among the doves, Abba Eban was first in with his criticism, terming the Allon article "unwise and untimely."

"I am afraid the plan is sufficiently severe to make the Arabs recoil, and yet sufficiently detailed territorially to open up a rather superfluous territorial debate among Israelis," Eban said in a radio interview.

The Middle East crisis continued not because of Israel's refusal to evacuate administered territory but because of the Arabs' refusal to make peace. "I have therefore never been very favourable to a presentation which put so much stress on the territorial aspects and so little relative stress on what is meant by the conception of peace," he said.

Eban said some members of the Government had made it clear that Israel was ready for far-reaching territorial concessions in return for real peace. "We should add that they would be such as would not involve continuation of Israeli jurisdiction over most of the one million Arabs.

"At this stage, I would stop short there and leave the detailed territorial discussion to a negotiating stage. Otherwise I am afraid we are simply discussing the territory with ourselves, and are giving the Arabs a somewhat rigorous impression of the price that they would have to pay even if they were ready — and I am afraid they are not ready — for permanent peace," Eban said.

Suez oil talks fail but 'crisis averted'

By DAVID LANDAU
Jerusalem Post Diplomatic Correspondent

The American-Israeli talks on oil drilling in the Gulf of Suez have broken off without reaching agreement, but an immediate crisis has apparently been averted and further talks will be held.

The talks were held in Washington between top State Department aides and Israeli officials during Thursday and Friday. They ended with a deliberately unrevealing communique saying: "The exchange of information was useful, clarifying the situation, and exchanges will continue through diplomatic channels."

It was clear that the optimistic predictions voiced by Israeli government officials during last week have not been borne out. The basic dispute between Jerusalem and Washington over further drilling in the Gulf still remained unresolved, both in its legal and its practical aspects. Officials here said Foreign Minister Allon would take up the matter with Secretary Kissinger when they meet in the U.S. soon. (Mr. Allon leaves this week for the UN General Assembly.)

The dispute, which dates back to the immediate post-Six Day War period, took a violent turn recently when Israeli patrol boats fired at buoys belonging to the American Amoco oil company. Israel maintains that the eastern side of the Suez Gulf, up to the half-way line, is under its control by virtue of its occupation of the Sinai Peninsula. Any drilling east of the half-way line must therefore be undertaken only with Israeli consent — which Amoco did not obtain.

Jerusalem Post Staff

Rabbi Yehezkel Abramsky, dean of Israel's rabbis and widely considered the foremost Talmud scholar of the age, died in Jerusalem last night, aged 91.

His funeral will leave his home, 7 Breuer Street, Bayit Vegan, at twelve noon today for the Har Hamenuhot cemetery.

Rabbi Abramsky was the first recipient of the Israel Prize for Rabbinic Literature, for his monumental work "Hazon Yehezkel."

He came to live in Israel in 1950 after serving for two decades as head of the London Beit Din.

Nurses to decide today on next step

Jerusalem Post Staff

TEL AVIV. — The secretariat of the Nurses Union will meet today to discuss the results of their strike, which enters its fifth day today.

One proposal, it is learned, is to intensify the strike by various means; another is to call off the strike as such, but to institute work-to-rule sanctions instead. The latter, one nurse explained, would have the same effect as a strike, since it would force many departments to close down due to the lack of nurses.

The doctors have adopted this method in their fight. During Fri*day's* meeting of the Ministerial Wage Committee, Dr. Rami Yishay, president of the Israel Medical Association, told the committee that the dispute did not fall within its jurisdiction. The doctors' sanctions, he said, were aimed less at wage increases than at forcing employers to increase the number of doctors so that no doctor would have to work more than six night shifts a month. "No amount of pay can compensate a doctor for so many night shifts," he said.

The Ministerial Wage Committee also heard a proposal to issue back-to-work orders, but Health Minister Victor Shemtov rejected the idea.

On Friday, the Histadrut Central Committee called on the nurses to return to work. It approved granting incentive pay to hospital nurses to prevent them from deserting the hospitals as a place of employment. The Central Committee, however, reaffirmed its previous stand that

Man dies in Arab protest

Security reinforcements were sent yesterday to key towns on the West Bank and to East Jerusalem in the wake of a fresh wave of protests against the closure of several hundred dunam of Arab land on the West Bank by the army. Some Arabs expressed the fear that the army move was a prelude to land requisition for the establishment of new Israeli settlements.

A 24-year-old Hebron resident, Mohammed Ahmed Joneidi, was killed and a youth from Tulkarm was wounded on Friday in a clash with troops in the Old City of Jerusalem. Joneidi's funeral took place quietly in Hebron before dawn yesterday.

Security spokesmen said that Joneidi and the Tulkarm youth were hit by "warning shots" after a patrol had been attacked.

A police spokesman said that the Old City incident occurred at the end of the traditional Friday prayers at al-Aksa, where a record 40,000 worshippers had turned out for the last week of the fasting month of Ramadan. Hundreds of frenzied Arab youths chanting "Allahu Akbar" (God is Great) and anti-Israeli slogans broke away through the western "Majlis" (coun*cil) gate and attacked* a border police patrol with bottles and rocks.

"The patrol fired a number of warning shots, hitting two persons." One was dead on arrival at the Old City Hospice, and the other was treated for a thigh wound.

Classes were disrupted yesterday in East Jerusalem and several West Bank towns. Eye witnesses said that brief demonstrations, during which roadblocks were put up and tyres set ablaze, took place in Ramallah, El-Bireh, Jenin, Toulkarm, Kalkilya and Nablus yesterday.

Security forces kept a close watch, but did not intervene in any of the demonstrations.

South African non-whites tell Kissinger

Worse violence unless racial bias ends

PRETORIA. — Non-white leaders in riot-plagued South Africa told U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger yesterday that greater violence is imminent unless the Pretoria Government ends racial discrimination.

"It was put very clearly to Dr. Kissinger that this is the last group of black leaders he is meeting who are still prepared to bring about peaceful change," said Prof. Hudson Ntanwisi, leader of the Gazankulu tribal homeland.

He was speaking after black, coloured and Indian leaders met with the Secretary of State for some two hours here.

One of the participants was Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, leader of the Zulu nation. He said the principal message conveyed to Kissinger was that unless a multi-racial convention is held to draw up a new constitution for South Africa, "the alternative is only violence."

Buthelezi issued a written statement addressed to Kissinger and said it contained a message given to the Secretary of State during the meeting.

"The West must recognize that right now we (black South Africans) are struggling for our political emancipation and for all the freedoms and rights entrenched in the American constitution," the statement said.

Dr. Kissinger also had a second round of talks with Prime Minister John Vorster yesterday.

Shortly after his 2½ hour session with Mr. Vorster at Libertas, the South African Prime Minister's official residence, Dr. Kissinger nar*rowly avoided bumping into* Rhodesian leader Ian Smith.

Mr. Smith arrived from Salisbury yesterday morning for talks with Mr. Vorster and to watch the rugby match between South Africa and New Zealand.

At least three persons were reported killed and 12 injured on Friday when police in the black township of Soweto, near Johannesburg, fired on demonstrators protesting against Dr. Kissinger's visit.

Police confirmed over the weekend that at least eight persons died and 41 were injured in rioting in coloured (mixed race) and African townships in the Cape Town area during a period of 24 hours.

Dr. Kissinger — who flew here after visits to Tanzania and Zambia — proclaimed U.S. opposition to the policy of apartheid, in an address to 150 U.S. embassy staff, including about 30 blacks, over the weekend.

South Africa, he said, "either

PRETORIA. — Secretary of State Henry Kissinger announced yesterday he will meet Rhodesian Premier Ian Smith, signalling a major breakthrough in his discussions to bring peace to southern Africa.

Kissinger's precondition for a meeting was that Smith would have to be ready to make major concessions to African demands for an early transition to Black majority rule.

Sarkis sees Arafat for 'crucial' talks today

By ANAN SAFADI
POST Middle East Affairs Correspondent

Lebanon's President-elect Elias Sarkis, accompanied by a senior Syrian army general, goes to the central Lebanese town of Shtoura today for talks with Yasser Arafat head of the Palestine Libera*tion Organization, aimed at* bringing about an end to the 18-month civil war

Associates of Sarkis, who is scheduled to take over office next Thurs*day, said that* the Shtoura meeting was expected to be "crucial."

A spokesman for the Phalange party, which is spearheading the Christian struggle against the PLO-leftist alliance, said that Lebanon was now "in a state of no peace and no war." He said that all hinged on today's talks. "We shall know after the talks whether there will be a peaceful settlement or another round of full-scale war."

Sarkis, who had talks with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat in Cairo over the weekend, flies to Shtoura via Damascus.

Sarkis is among a number of Lebanese politicians who went to Cairo for talks last week. They included Christian and Moslem personalities who are believed to have sought to persuade Egyptian leaders to persuade the PLO and Lebanon's leftists to agree to an early settlement of the civil war.

Sarkis and the Syrian Deputy Defence Minister, Maj.-Gen. Naji Jamil, conferred with Arafat at Shtoura on Friday, but the talks were reported to have ended inconclusively.

The Arab League's special envoy to Lebanon, Dr. Hassan Sabri el-Kholy, under whose auspices the Shtoura meeting was held, said that Friday's talks touched on three main points: the proclamation of an immediate ceasefire; the elimination of the armed presence from key sites; and the implementation of the 1969 Cairo accord which restricts the PLO's presence and movement in Lebanon.

Reports from Beirut however said that Arafat, speaking for the PLO-leftist alliance, declined to accept a proposal for a prompt withdrawal of his forces from western Beirut, the central mountain area and other enclaves. On the other hand, Sarkis and Maj.-Gen. Jamil turned down a PLO-leftist demand for the withdrawal of Syrian forces from Lebanon.

Unconfirmed reports said that the Syrians reasserted their threat to step up their military intervention if there is any hitch to the inauguration of Sarkis as president next Thursday.

In a surprise development, the Soviets have dispatched their Middle East roving ambassador, Vladimir Vinogradov, to Damascus for talks with Syrian leaders, presumably over Lebanon.

Two youths die in Golan fall

KIRYAT SHMONA. — The bodies of Ya'acov Liebman and Nadav Neuman, two members of Kibbutz Ein Tzurim in the south who died in a climbing accident in the Golan Heights, were found on Friday in Nahal Yehudiya near here.

An extended search by the Army and police, aided by trackers and members of kibbutzim and moshavim in the area, led to the finding of the bodies.

Liebman, 17, and Neuman, 18, set off for a hike in the Golan last Sunday with two other friends. The next day Liebman and Neuman continued without the others who returned home—after agreeing that they would end their hike on Wednesday. When they failed to come back, relatives of the two informed police and the search began.

It is believed that the victims fell about 15 metres into a wadi when the rope they attached to a rock or a bush above became loose.

Nahal Yehudiya, where the tragedy occurred, is a favourite among hikers for its beautiful, steep cliffs, waterfalls and lush greenery. (Itim)

'No to Iran could hurt Israel'

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — All Middle East states friendly to the U.S. — including Israel — will be harmed if Congress votes down the Administration's proposal to sell F-16 fighters to Iran, Undersecretary of State Philip Habib told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee over the weekend.

At the end of the committee session, Assistant Secretary of Defence Robert Ellsworth said that Israel itself had not yet submitted a request to buy the F-16. But he said it was one of the countries interested, and would be placed in the long queue of states waiting for supply of the plane to begin at the start of the 'eighties.

Israel has reportedly not yet decided whether to order the F-16 or to build its own equivalent, which would be powered by the same engine. A decision on this is expected soon, in connection with the visit to the U.S. of a military mission headed by Israel Air Force Commander Benjamin Peled.

Soldier drowns in Solomon's Pools

BETHLEHEM. — The body of 19-year-old Albert Mish'al was recovered yesterday from one of the Solomon's Pools reservoirs near here yesterday, two days after the soldier vanished while apparently taking a swim. When a partial draining of the pool on Thursday failed to turn up the body, searchers began dragging it with a fishing net, and this finally produced results yesterday.

Bathing is prohibited in the reservoirs, which date back to the time of Herod. (Itim)

Rabinowitz postpones planned Eban meeting

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Finance Minister Yehoshua Rabinowitz yesterday postponed a meeting with former Foreign Minister Abba Eban, in which he was expected to suggest Eban join the Cabinet.

Rabinowitz phoned Eban yesterday morning, told him too much public attention had been focused on the scheduled meeting, and suggested it be postponed to the middle of the week so they can discuss the matter quietly. Eban agreed.

Eban's cooption has been mooted for some time. Housing Minister Avraham Ofer met the former Foreign Minister a fortnight ago and suggested he join the Cabinet as Minister without Portfolio. Eban rejected the proposal outright. It was not clear, last night, whether Rabinowitz had a more substantial suggestion to make. Some observers believed the meeting was postponed because he didn't.

Eban's relations with Prime Minister Yizhak Rabin were strained when Eban was Foreign Minister and Rabin Ambassador to Washington. Eban is also believed to have felt slighted when Rabin formed his Cabinet, appointing Yigal Allon Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister and offering Eban only the Information portfolio.

Rabinowitz and some other party leaders are believed to advocate Eban's cooption into the Cabinet to stop him from putting forward his candidacy for the premiership. Eban may not necessarily win the nomination but may draw some of Rabin's support, improving the prospects of Shimon Peres.

Eban has recently claimed he was not interested in joining the Cabinet, which is reaching its last stage of its term. His public image is believed to have improved since he left the Cabinet and spoke his mind more freely. A junior position on the Cabinet, limiting his freedom of expression on the Rabin Government policies, would not enhance his stature, it was argued.

Sharon to found own Israel lobby in U.S.

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — Aluf (res.) Ariel Sharon said here over the weekend that he plans to return to the U.S. soon to set up a movement that will fight both U.S. Middle East policy and the policy of the Rabin Government.

The one-time Likud Knesset Member, who was speaking to reporters before leaving for Israel, said he had met in the U.S. with Jewish leaders who were interested in joining such a movement. He refused to mention any names.

He added that he no longer belongs to any political party, and said he will be returning to the U.S. at the end of October, at his own expense.

Sharon said the new body would not be linked to the Zionist Organization of America, which had invited him to speak at its New York convention, or to any other existing Jewish organization. He noted that in the U.S. it is not necessary to find an organizational sponsor in order to found a political movement.

Sharon said all Jewish Agency and aliya emissaries, and representatives of Israeli companies in the U.S., should be recalled to Israel. He described their presence in the U.S. as "almost official emigration."

Responding to criticisms of his prediction — voiced at the ZOA convention — of a great wave of Jewish emigration from Israel, he said he was convinced there would be such a wave of emigration by Jewish workers. This was because physical labour was no longer valued in Israeli society, and the labour market in Israel had been taken over by Arabs.

Yeshayahu seeks probe of charges against him

Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter

Knesset Speaker Yisrael Yeshayahu has asked the State Comptroller Dr. Ernst Nebenzahl to examine charges against Yeshayahu by Ehud Olmert (Likud), who alleged that the Speaker engaged Knesset staff to do private jobs for him.

The Speaker denies Olmert's charges.

Olmert took up his charges with Yeshayahu in a conversation with him last week and alleged that:

- Yeshayahu got the Knesset's chief maintenance man, Reuven Cohen, to do jobs at his private residence three years ago.
- Yeshayahu got two Knesset carpenters to install shelves at his private residence and paid them IL160 for the work and materials.
- Yeshayahu got the Knesset bookbinder and the Knesset printer to do private work for him without pay.

Olmert caused a stir last month when he accused Yeshayahu of firing the previous internal comptroller of the Knesset, Shimon Lieberman, because Lieberman probed too deeply in his inspection operations. Olmert said then it looked as if Yeshayahu were covering up for improper conduct on the part of senior Knesset officials. Olmert and other MKs managed to foil Yeshayahu's appointment of former Labour MK Baruch Azania to replace Lieberman. A tender is being issued for the post.

Mayor to resist replacement vote

Jerusalem Post Reporter

UPPER NAZARETH. — Mayor Mordechai Allon said on Friday that he would be a candidate for the mayorship next year, despite a local Labour Party branch vote to replace him in next year's municipal elections.

"I will leave it to the voters to decide who will be their mayor," Allon said on Friday. "The creation of Upper Nazareth has been my life's work. I have given, and shall give it, the best years of my life."

Allon refused comment on whether his statement meant that he was considering leaving the Labour Party.

Earlier, the party local branch had voted, 39-11, to replace Allon as its candidate with Deputy Mayor Menahem Ariav. Before the vote was taken, Allon and eight of his supporters walked out of the meeting.

Ariav said that, under a rotation agreement between the two men, Allon was to have stepped down from his post last year. Allon refused to do so, he said.

IN MEMORIAM JOSEF (JUPP) WEISZ

The 'Elder' of Bergen-Belsen

It is now 32 years since a group of Dutch Jews first stood on the bare spot in the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp in Nazi Germany called the "Appellplatz." We were alone, lost and without leadership. And yet there was one man apparently designated by nature to assume responsibility.

He was Jupp Weisz, who passed away last week in Jerusalem at the age of 83. Without being chosen, he became the only person authorized to speak for us to the Germans. He had all the necessary qualities for this difficult task, for he was a proud Jew and a man of stature who immediately commanded respect by friend and foe. He knew, more or less by instinct, how to deal with his fellow inmates, and even more important, how to speak on our behalf with the Germans.

It was not an easy job and nobody envied him as "Lageraeltester." — the camp elder. Every decision that had to be taken was difficult and trying. But whatever his ruling, it was based on honesty and integrity, which only a man of the stature of Jupp Weisz could have maintained under the circumstances.

There remains only admiration for the way he performed his duties as leader of the Dutch Jewish inmates, while having his own personal anxieties as a husband and father.

He died on September 12, 1976, exactly 28 years to the day when he came to Israel with the first Dutch merchant ship to call at Haifa, four months after the State of Israel was established. We will always remember Jupp as he was then: a powerful figure and leader who gave the best he had to a community in captivity. He is survived by his wife and two sons, and many grateful friends. DeVr.

Winery head buried

TEL AVIV. — Ya'acov Avni, for 40 years director of the Zichron Ya'acov winery of Carmel Mizrahi, was buried here on Friday. He died of pneumonia in Madrid on Tuesday, at the age of 68. He retired from the firm a few years ago.

Born in Poland, Avni graduated from the Mikvei Yisrael agricultural school, continued his studies in France and trained in winemaking in Algiers. He is survived by his wife, a daughter and two grandchildren.

NEARLY 3,000 tourists arrived in Haifa in five passenger liners, two of them from Alexandria, on Friday. They included 650 Spaniards who will stay for five days as part of a cruise on the Spanish ship Cabo San Roque.

Israel crushes Turks in Davis Cup tennis

By JACK LEON
Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter

RAMAT HASHARON. — Israel yesterday achieved its sixth — and easiest-ever — Davis Cup victory, when it took a winning 3-0 lead over Turkey here in the first round of the European Zone's 1977 competition.

The Israelis, who now meet Holland in Eindhoven next week-end, did not lose a set and conceded a total of only 10 games in winning Friday's two singles and yesterday's doubles. The tie will be concluded today (starting at 1.30 p.m.) with the two reverse "dead" singles.

Shlomo Glickstein, 18, made a little bit of tennis history on Friday, by becoming the first Israeli player to win a singles match on his Davis Cup debut. Glickstein defeated Turkish No. 1 Murat Gurler, 17, 7-5, 6-1, 6-0, his opponent fading away after coming back finely from 0-3 to 3-all in the opening set, and then actually leading 40-30 at 5-all. The match lasted 70 minutes.

Local champion Yair Wertheimer, 21, in his seventh Davis Cup appearance, looked equally sharp as he demolished Turkey's third-ranking Cahit Atas 6-0, 6-0, 6-2 in 45 minutes. Atas, 25, who is a ski instructor by profession, contributed to his own downfall by serving a score of double faults. A capacity crowd of more than 1,500 people watched the first day's play in the comfort of Ramat Hasharon's superbly-appointed new Israel Tennis Centre.

The woefully-weak display of this second-string Turkish team continued yesterday, when some 600 spectators saw Wertheimer and his new partner Ilan Sherr, 19 — like Glickstein making a highly-impressive debut in the Davis Cup — race to a 6-1, 6-1, 6-0 victory over Gurler and Turkish No. 2 Ali Yenilmez, 18, in less than an hour.

Israel's team manager Haim Landes told The Jerusalem Post last night that the squad against Holland will consist of Yosef Stabholz, captain, and Wertheimer, Glickstein and Sherr.

Football champions lose in capital

Big crowds see opening games

Tel Aviv Maccabi scored an impressive away win against Haifa Maccabi in the first Saturday of league fixtures in the new football season. It was the only away win of the day in the National League, and the Tel Aviv side gave warning that they would be a hard team to beat this year. After trailing by two goals, they brought off a 4-2 win, with a hat trick from Benny Tabak — the first of the season.

League champions Beersheba Hapoel travelled to the capital to lose their first match of the season 2-1 to Jerusalem Hapoel. Eli Levy and Zion Turjeman scored for the Jerusadem side and the champions pulled back five minutes before the end through a Shalom Avykon goal.

Tel Aviv Betar beat Haifa Hapoel 3-0. The Haifa team finished in third place in last season's league standings. Jaffa Maccabi beat Kfar Sava Hapoel 3-1, and Tel Aviv Hapoel gained a similar result against Petah Tikva Maccabi. Newcomers Yahud Hapoel held last year's cupwinners, Jerusalem Betar, to a goalless draw, and the other newly promoted side, Acre Hapoel, also drew 0-0, against Tel Aviv Shimshon.

Gates were high at yesterday's matches. Fifteen thousand spectators turned up to Bloomfield stadium in Jaffa, and there were ten thousand at the clash between the Tel Aviv and Haifa Maccabi teams at Haifa's Kiryat Eliezer stadium. Crowd behaviour was reported to be generally good.

There will be no league matches next Saturday because of Rosh Hashana.

Ramat Gan draws with Netanya

Match of the week
Dudley Kessel

More than 3,000 fans who watched Ramat Gan Hakoah kick off the season against Netanya Maccabi were disappointed by goalless draw. Though the visitors' Maccabi were disappointed by a two most prolific scorers of last season, Oded Machnes and David Lavi, had a number of good scoring opportunities, especially in the second half, they hardly tested veteran Hakoah keeper Dani Mano.

Hakoah relied mainly on their traditional game of hard tackling in defence and the long high ball, which is always a danger on their small ground. Netanya played some attractive football in midfield, but their attack lacked bite.

Netanya veteran Mordechai Spiegler showed much of his old class as he laid on a number of accurate passes for his younger team-mates. Hakoah's captain, Zvi Farkash, was dominant in the air, outshining Israel international Haim Bar, who was given the task of shadowing him. Netanya goalie Yeshayahu Auerbach, signed only this week from Hadera Hapoel, showed excellent form, especially when coming out to gather high crosses.

In the last twenty minutes Netanya took control, as Haim Bar and back Gadi Machnes surged forward on the flanks. But poor finishing enabled the home side to emerge with a point.

South Africa wins rugby series

JOHANNESBURG. — South Africa won the fourth Rugby football test against the New Zealand All Blacks 15-14 yesterday, clinching the international series by three games to one.

The New Zealanders scored two tries, a drop goal and a penalty, but the South Africans snatched victory with a goal, two penalties and a drop goal.

A crowd of 72,000 included South African Prime Minister John Vorster and his Rhodesian counterpart, Ian Smith. (AP)

8,000 swim Kinneret

TIBERIAS. — About 8,000 persons yesterday took part in the 23rd annual Kinneret swim, a 4 km. distance from the Ha'on beach to Tsemach.

The event is not competitive and prizes are awarded to the largest groups. This year's first prize went to the Ma'aleh Yehuda Hapoel contingent, which turned up with 550 men and women. Several hundred war invalids of the Spivak Club also took part.

Fishermen seek drought declaration

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — The 200 sardine fishermen last week demanded that 1976 be declared an official "drought at sea" year, and that the Government extend them drought compensation.

At an emergency meeting here, it was noted that during the first half of the sardine season, which began in April, only 300 tons — half the usual total — were caught and that the second half of the season, which started at the beginning of this month appeared "even worse."

The Fisherman's Union, the Fisheries Department, and a representative of the Agriculture Ministry prevailed on the men to postpone the official declaration, until the end of the season in November, in the hope that "the sardines may yet turn up." However, the union today will ask the Agriculture Ministry to grant the men advances on their heavy outlays for boat fuel and gas for the lamps with which they attract the sardines, in order to enable them to carry on working.

Experts state that such a "drought" is a fairly regular event, occurring about once every decade.

Union secretary Dov Schmiede told The Post that due to the poor catches, 18 of the 28 groups of sardine fishers already have started looking for other fish or taking shore jobs. The remaining ten would carry on, if they get fuel support, he said.

Caesarea golf

CAESAREA. — Golf club captain Mike Ossip of Herzliya Pituah yesterday bettered 49 players, lost to 18 and drew with eight in the Captains Day tournament here. The individual Stableford event was won by Shai Cohen of Savyon with 44 points.

The "B" division was taken by Harry Brodie of Kfar Shmariyahu with 38 points and Elias Hassan was top of the "C" division with 40 points.

Effie Been of Herzliya won Friday's individual event with 37 points. Peter di Donato of Herzliya Pituah took the "B" division with 41 points and Irving Bronsky of Haifa the "C" division with 31 points.

Shipyard workers threaten strike

HAIFA. — The 660 workers of the Israel Shipyards are to hold a general meeting this morning, to decide on industrial action to back their wage claims. This follows the failure of their committee to achieve anything through a three-day sit-in outside the general manager's office.

An effort to settle the dispute by the Labour Council failed, and the committee is determined to force the management to give in to their demands for "specific" allowances. These allowances would be over and above their work contract.

According to management estimates, their demands would raise wages by some 15 per cent and the management wants an undertaking from the men that no further demands will be made until the end of the current contract, which terminates at the end of next year.

SUEZ OIL TALKS

tently maintained since 1967, is that Israel's rights of occupation extend only up to the Sinai coastline. The Gulf remains unoccupied, according to the U.S. view, despite the fact that Israeli naval craft entered it on June 7, 1967 and have effectively controlled the eastern half ever since.

The dispute first flared up soon after the 1967 war, when Israel sought to drill for oil off the Sinai coast near Ras Sudar, at a site which formed part of an American company's concession, granted by Egypt before the war. An occupying power is legally entitled to exploit raw materials at a reasonable rate, but the Americans did not recognize Israel's occupation of the Gulf waters.

Israel at that time obtained the support of several leading international lawyers for its legal contentions — but the State Department remained unimpressed.

The current flare-up over Amoco's drillings has been complicated by the company's claim that its concession will terminate on September 21 (Tuesday).

A highly-placed source in Jerusalem told The Post last night that, following the talks in Washington at the week's end, this element of time pressure has now been removed. "Amoco cried wolf," the source said.

He refused to explain the precise link between the American-Israeli talks and the time-span of the Amoco concession, which is granted by the Egyptian government.

He maintained, however, that with the time-pressure now removed, the subsequent diplomatic contacts, referring to Amoco and other American companies, could proceed in a more comfortable atmosphere.

Our Washington correspondent writes: Responsibility for the failure was placed by diplomatic sources in Washington on Amoco. They asserted that the oil company refused to agree to an arrangement that would allow drilling in the disputed area only, and insisted that it had rights in other parts of the Suez Gulf adjacent to the Sinai coast. Israel is conducting trial drillings in those areas with a different American firm.

The sources claimed that Amoco had reached an agreement with Egypt to extend the period of their concession — due to lapse on Tuesday — but had declined to announce it publicly.

"It's not a simple decision to make," said Dr. Muten. "Every country must consider local conditions — the economic atmosphere and the attitude of the potential investor. And administratively, it is also difficult.. tax incentives, by nature, are discriminatory. So, how do you administer a discriminatory system in a non-discriminatory manner? It is very difficult indeed."

Dr. Muten cautioned against depending on tax incentives as a panacea for attracting development money. He said, "There are other factors, too, in the mind of an investor before he comes into a country and establishes an enterprise. Will he have ready access to markets and energy sources? Is there a dependable labour force? What about the technological resources available?

"Some countries have so many problems that no amount of tax incentives can help. Nevertheless, a good tax incentive programme can be the deciding factor in an investor's mind. So great care must be given in spelling out such a programme."

El Yam had offered to submit the dispute to arbitration or to a scientific ruling by the Productivity Institute, but the Union rejected the offer, and warned that it would strike every incoming ship of the company until its demands were met.

El Yam managing director Ya'acov Recanati told The Post that the extra two men would merely increase the concealed unemployment on board, and that the bigger Israeli crew was already raising operating costs of the tanker by "hundreds of thousands of pounds annually". He had appealed to the Histadrut to intervene in the dispute, but for technical reasons, a meeting scheduled for last Thursday did not take place.

Judge Ben-Ito noted, however, that the prosecution did not entirely go along with this, as it felt a one-agora fine might be interpreted as a slap in the face for itself. She therefore imposed a fine of IL1,000 on each firm, saying that in present-day terms this sum could be considered symbolic.

Boy, 12, sought in school stabbing

HAIFA. — A 12-year-old boy is suspected of stabbing a 14-year-old — the son of a rival clan — in the elementary school in the village of Ibtin, east of here, on Thursday.

The assailant fled to the hills, and the wounded boy was rushed to Rambam Hospital in serious condition.

Police suspect that "blood revenge" was the motive for the crime, since the sister of the 12-year-old had been killed in a traffic accident that involved a relative of the wounded boy. They are searching for the assailant. (Itim)

Student charged with misusing duty exemptions

TEL AVIV. — A 29-year-old student from Tel Aviv was indicted at the District Court here last week on charges of fraud, forgery and smuggling, all connected with the improper use of new immigrants' customs exemptions.

The prosecution charged Ilan Silver, with a long list of offences including illegally transferring abroad more than $30,000 and DM50,000. In at least two cases, the prosecution said, Silver opened a joint account with new immigrants from the U.S. and used its facilities to order duty-free luxury goods and smuggle out foreign currency that he bought on the black market here.

Another one of the charges against Silver is that he bought new immigrant's certificates and forged the names on the cards so that he could buy at duty-free shops. The prosecution said that he bought the certificates for sums ranging from IL50 to IL4,000.

The judge agreed to a defence request to delay remand proceedings until this week. (Itim)

Stolen cars await owners

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Nine stolen cars are waiting in the Jerusalem police garage for their owners to claim them, Jerusalem police spokesman Natan Ronen said last week.

Speaking at a press conference in police headquarters at the Russian Compound, Ronen said the cars turned up after police uncovered a ring of automobile thieves involving garages in Tel Aviv and the Capital.

He said the members of the ring would buy wrecked cars, steal similar models, and switch the numbers of the stolen cars to those of the wrecks.

The makes of the stolen cars are Volvo, Fiat 127, Peugeot 404, BMW, Triumph, Ford Transit van, Subaru Sport and Mini Minor.

Three months for illegal room

TEL AVIV. — A resident of Tel Aviv's Hatikva quarter, Yosef Groppi, was given a three-month jail sentence on Friday by the District Court here for having added a room without a building permit. The court, which was hearing an appeal from a Municipal Court sentence of four months, also issued a demolition order.

The court said it would not even have heard the case had Groppi not presented medical evidence of poor health. It added that, in the light of his record of illegal building, the sentence was not stiff enough.

NETANYA. — One of the persons who knew beforehand about the arson at the Park Hotel in Netanya last March was found guilty last week of withholding knowledge of the fire in which five persons were killed.

David Amar, 18, of Netanya, was not sentenced because the court is waiting for the opinion of his probation officer. He overheard a conversation about the fire two days before the crime but did not inform the police. The two chief suspects in the case went on trial on Wednesday at the District Court in Tel Aviv. Soviets put the screws on released Prisoner of Zion

By SARAH HONIG
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Former Prisoner of Zion Yuri Vudka has been subjected to "special control" by the police and public prosecutor in the small Ukrainian town of Pavlograd.

Vudka was told that the "special control" is warranted by the fact that he has been "maintaining contact with persons of the Jewish nationality" and that the seven years hard-labour prison term which he completed last month "had obviously failed to rehabilitate" him and turn him into "a good, law-abiding Soviet citizen again."

One of six young students at the Riazan Institute for Radar Technology, Vudka was arrested in 1969 and convicted on vague charges of anti-Soviet activity. The trial of the group was one of the first collective trials of those seeking to go to Israel.

Usually, freed Prisoners of Zion have no trouble in reapplying for aliya permits and get their exit visas quite speedily. But as soon as he reached his home town, Pavlograd officials told Vudka bluntly: "No one has yet succeeded in obtaining an exit visa from us. No one from this place has gone to Israel, and no one will. You will be no exception." Vudka was then warned that unless he stopped applying for the exit visa and got himself a job, he would be arrested again and charged with "parasitism."

Now it has been learned that the town's prosecutor and police chief have decided to put Vudka under "special control." He is forbidden from leaving his house between 6 p.m. and 6 a.m., and is subject to numerous other restrictions.

This unusual treatment of an ex-Prisoner of Zion has given rise to considerable concern here. It is hoped that the severe treatment is the result of extra zeal of small-town officials and that it does not signal a change in Soviet policy.

Vudka's prison life was unusually harsh, and he launched several prolonged hunger strikes. Following one of them, a year ago, he became seriously ill but was denied medical aid. At his trial, when the judge accused Vudka of being a nationalist, the defendant replied: "If a nationalist is someone who demands textbooks for his people, culture and a homeland, then I am the first nationalist."

Firm may ink out male organs, court rules

HAIFA. — A woman student at Haifa University on Friday lost her civil suit against a large firm of newspaper and magazine distributors for their practice of obscuring the genitalia in nude photographs of men.

In the District Court on Friday, the student, Haya Ashkenazi, claimed that the practice of the distributors, Steimatzky's, in obscuring the sexual organs in photographs of male nudes appearing in the magazine "Playgirl" was personally injurious to her and discriminatory against the female sex.

Ashkenazi, a member of the local feminist organization, based her case in part on the clause in Israel's Declaration of Independence which ensures sexual equality.

In the course of the hearing, Ashkenazi's legal representative claimed that the firm has recently given up the practice of inking out male genitalia in the "Playgirl" photographs.

The judge rejected a defence plea to have the action struck off. He found, however, that the defendants had acted reasonably because under local laws affecting pornography they might have been prosecuted if they had published the magazine without obscuring the vital zones of the pictures concerned.

He ordered Ashkenazi to pay IL300 court costs. (Itim)

Slogan-painting feminists held

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Four Jerusalem feminists were arrested yesterday at 4 a.m. in Mahane Yehuda and remanded for 48 hours on suspicion of painting slogans on walls urging free legal abortions.

Such slogans have appeared in Jerusalem recently, most prominently at the Beit Agron Journalists' House and the Mitchel Auditorium.

The women, all members of the Jerusalem branch of the Feminist Movement, were allegedly found by police near a freshly-painted wall and reportedly were carrying cans of spray paint. The police had been alerted by Haga patrolmen.

holds the key or can make a decisive contribution to peace in this part of the world."

Dr. Kissinger told the embassy staff: "We have had occasion to say that as far as the U.S. is concerned the concept of human dignity must have universal application. We cannot agree with any concept that is based on the separation of races."

Dr. Kissinger gave an apocalyptic view of what might happen if peace efforts fail in Southern Africa, beset by black-white conflict in Rhodesia, South-West Africa (Namibia) and South Africa itself.

"War between the races, if it once started, would have the profoundest implications for international stability on a global scale."

Turning to his talks with Mr. Vorster — their third meeting in three months — Dr. Kissinger said: "We hope that progress is being made on subjects that have a long legacy and are extremely painful to deal with for all parties."

On the question of Rhodesia, Kissinger has ruled out either negotiating or arguing with Mr. Smith about details of any transfer of power to the blacks. But a senior official who travels with the Secretary has told reporters that if Kissinger were to decide to summon Smith to a meeting it would be safe to assume a breakthrough was imminent. In other words, it would imply that Smith had virtually accepted the inevitability of having to yield to the combined pressures of the U.S. and South Africa about majority rule in Rhodesia.

The fact that Kissinger could not immediately reach a decision to meet with Smith suggested that the response Vorster conveyed on Smith's behalf was either unsatisfactory or required more clarification and study.

A Salisbury report says that a white Rhodesian policeman was killed and two other policemen were wounded when the boat in which they were patrolling the Zambesi River was raked by machinegun fire from neighbouring Zambia.

An official communique did not say whether the shots were fired by Zambian troops or by black nationalist guerrillas.

Japanese say Mig-25 'lacks sophistication'

TOKYO. — The Soviet Mig-25 Foxbat warplane that landed at Hakodate Airport in Northern Japan last week is less sophisticated than had previously been believed, bearing a resemblance more to a "manned rocket," informed sources said yesterday.

The sources said one of the biggest surprises was that the plane lacked any ejection gear to throw the pilot free from the cockpit and allow him to parachute to safety in the event of an emergency.

The plane, described as a high-altitude, high-speed interceptor rather than a fighter, was flown to Hakodate by a Soviet defector, air force Lt. Viktor Belenko.

The sources said the Mig had a very good engine and had a high standard of metallurgy in its wings and fuselage construction, but they described the electronic equipment as "relatively unsophisticated." They said the Mach gauge for indicating the plane's speed was marked to Mach Three — around 3,648 kph — but there was a red warning line at Mach 2.8.

The informed sources said the plane was equipped to carry four missiles, but no guns. It was not armed when it landed at Hakodate. They added the plane was not a fighter-bomber but purely an interceptor and lacked manoeuvrability.

There was informed speculation that the reconnaissance version, the Mig-25B, probably had a slightly higher speed than the Mig-25A.

A Japanese Self Defence Agency spokesman said yesterday that the dismantling of the plane would begin today. He added that the Americans would cooperate in the operation.

"We received word through the Foreign Ministry that the U.S. military promised to cooperate 'under Japan's initiative' for dismantling, transferring and inspecting the top-secret Soviet aircraft," the spokesman said.

The spokesman, meanwhile, flatly denied a report in the West German magazine "Stern" that Japanese authorities knew in advance that the Mig was to be flown to Japan after Belenko had been persuaded to defect by an Austrian engineer working for the Central Intelligence Agency.

Quoting reliable Western sources, "Stern" said that 10 days before the defection the U.S. alerted Japanese Defence Minister Michita Sakata that the top-secret Soviet jet was expected at any time.

Belenko landed the plane September 6 in Hakodate in Northern Japan after, "Stern" said, he shook off an accompanying Mig-25. The magazine said that, until he ran low on fuel, Belenko had planned to fly to Alaska or a "secure air base."

The magazine said Belenko was approached on August 31, 1974, by the unidentified Austrian at a space and aviation symposium in the Armenian town of Tsachkadsor. Belenko had been one of three Mig-25 pilots tabbed as a likely prospect for defection because he was attached to the development staff, spoke good English and had difficulty with superiors, according to "Stern." 800 million Chinese stand with heads bowed for Mao

PEKING. — China paid its final tribute to Chairman Mao Tse-tung yesterday with the entire nation of 800 million ordered to attention, heads bowed.

For three minutes a quarter of mankind was said to be standing still and silent in memory of the Communist revolutionary who changed China and sent shock waves around the world.

By strict order, not a train, ship or plane moved and all traffic stopped amid a sea of human grief probably unparalleled in history.

The mourning was focused on Peking's Square of Heavenly Peace, where a vast congregation of one million lined up in regimented columns to hear a eulogy by Prime Minister Hua Kuo-feng.

His 20-minute address did not reveal what will happen to the body — whether Mao will lie in a permanent shrine or be cremated like Communist heroes in the past.

Neither did the rally offer any strong clues to who will succeed Mao, China's supreme ruler from the day the People's Republic was proclaimed 27 years ago until his death on September 9 at the age of 28.

But Western analysts noted that it afforded a unique stage for Premier Hua and for Wang Hung-wen, Communist Party vice-chairman who presided over the rally wearing the uniform of the People's Liberation Army.

Foreigners were barred from the ceremony. Troops patrolled rooftops and thousands of soldiers, police and militia sealed off the city centre.

The huge crowd of Chinese, each with a black armband and traditional white flower of mourning, stood in long ranks with eyes trained on a black-and-white portrait of Mao which hung from the gates of the Forbidden City.

When the half-hour ceremony ended with the playing of "The East is Red," the sound of weeping could be heard half a kilometre away. Down the main Avenue of Eternal Tranquillity, tens of thousands sat down, put their heads between their knees and sobbed. (Reuter)

'JDL threats' stop Paris film showing

PARIS. — A film about the Palestinian terrorist movement by left-wing French director Jean-Luc Godard has been withdrawn from a Paris cinema after threats by men claiming to be members of a local Jewish Defence League.

The film, "Ici et Ailleurs," (Here and There), which was partially filmed in the Middle East, was withdrawn after a fake bomb package was found in a Latin Quarter cinema.

Telephone calls to the press said the package had been placed there by the French Jewish Defence League. The film will continue to be shown at a cinema owned by a leftist film cooperative. (Reuter)

U.S. will try to raise jet from seabed

WASHINGTON. — The U.S. Navy said on Friday that it will attempt to recover the F-14 Tomcat — the newest and best of its carrier-based fighter planes — that is resting intact in more than 600 metres of water off the coast of Scotland.

Navy officials could not say whether a Soviet cruiser that had been in the area shortly after the plane rolled off the carrier John F. Kennedy was still nearby — possibly marking the location for a Soviet salvage effort.

The F-14, carrying the ultra-secret Phoenix missile system, rolled over the side of the Kennedy on Tuesday during a Nato exercise some 120 km. north of the British naval base of Scapa Flow.

The two crewmen ejected and landed on the carrier's flight-deck without serious injury.

The incident, caused by a jammed throttle on one of its two engines, happened in full view of the shadowing Soviet cruiser.

The top secret Tomcat is the U.S. Navy's premier fighter plane. It has proved itself with hits on actual targets up to 110 nautical miles (200 km.) away.

In addition, the plane's primary weapons system — the Phoenix missile — is capable of being launched at six targets simultaneously. The Phoenix guidance system is so far immune to any electronic counter measures now known to be in operation.

Recovery of the plane by the Soviets could mean an intelligence coup as significant to them as examination of the Mig-25 flown to Japan by a Russian defector earlier this month is to the U.S. The Mig-25, now being studied by Japanese experts, is the best of its kind in the Soviet arsenal.

Hours after the F-14 was lost, the Kennedy and the destroyer Bordelon were involved in a collision during a night refueling operation. It was shortly afterwards that the Soviet cruiser was seen shadowing the carrier, six to 11 km. away, a Navy spokesman said.

Soviet warships routinely follow U.S. Navy vessels during operations in international waters. (AP, Reuter)

Mozambique mine toll may hit 115

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania. — Some 107 miners trapped in a Mozambican coal mine since Thursday are believed to be dead, the Mozambique Information Agency said yesterday.

The agency said in Maputo that heavy concentrations of carbon dioxide were found in the mine by rescue workers.

It reported that eight bodies have been recovered but that the attempt to recover the remaining 107 has been hampered by a fire which is spreading through the mine. "Another explosion may occur at any time," the agency said.

The agency said that a short circuit in an electrical cable is suspected as having caused the explosion which ripped through the mine on Thursday. (AP)

Three hijackers get life for seizing Egyptian jet

CAIRO. — Three hijackers of an Egyptian airliner were sentenced to hard labour for life by a military tribunal here Friday. The trio hijacked the Egyptian Boeing 737 plane to Luxor on August 23.

The hijackers, Palestinians Ali Ahmed Osman, Mohammed Naguib and Egyptian Ahmed Suleiman, were overpowered by army commandos.

But the three were acquitted of a charge of contacting a foreign power — Libya. They all had pleaded guilty to attempted hijacking when their trial began on September 7.

Osman, 35-year-old construction worker, was also fined 100,000 Egyptian pounds while Naguib, 21, a television technician, was fined 5,000 pounds, and Suleiman, 21-year-old student 1,000 pounds.

Three other accused, Palestinian Suleiman Tirkawi, Eid Hussein, a Jordanian living in Cairo, and Palestinian Hussein Rashak, who was tried in absentia, were acquitted on all counts. (Reuter)

New U.S. space shuttle will carry 'ordinary passengers' into orbit

PALMDALE, California. — A red, white and blue tractor pulled America's $5b. space shuttle orbiter into the sunlight on Friday for its public unveiling before a crowd of several thousand.

The stubby, 40-metre-long orbiter is the next stage of the U.S. space programme. The craft, described as "part spacecraft, part launch vehicle and part airplane," will take ordinary passengers into space and back.

The orbiter was to have been called "The Constitution." President Ford changed the name to "Enterprise" after a letter-writing campaign from fans of "Star Trek," a long-running science fiction television programme. "Enterprise" is the name of the television starship dispatched into intergalactic space on a "five year mission to go where no man had ever gone before."

The space shuttle won't go quite that far. It is designed to go no farther than earth orbit. But it will carry four passengers in addition to its crew.

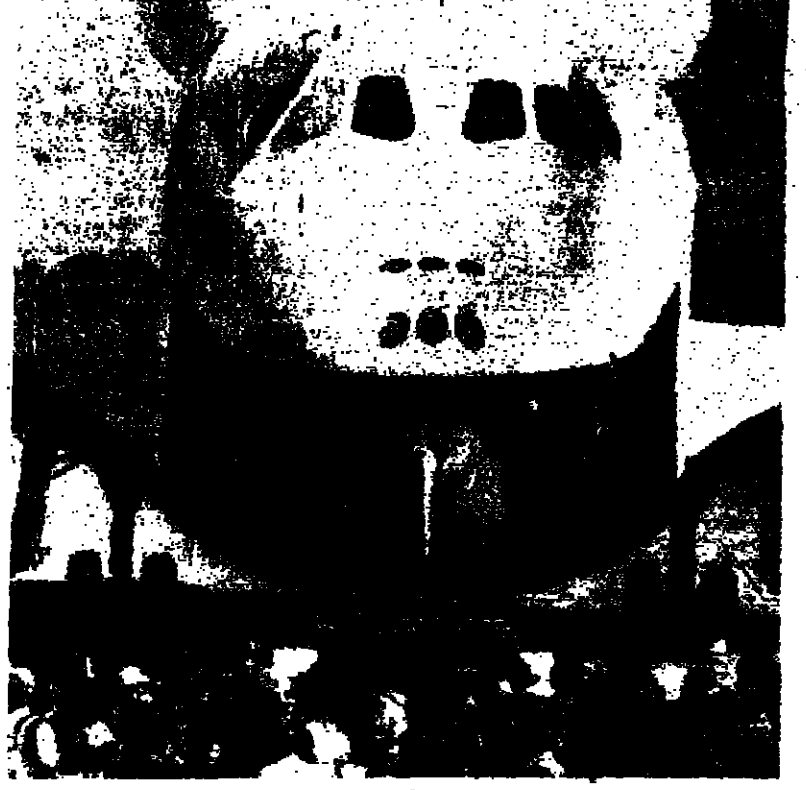
This will enable "not just astronauts and cosmonauts but all kinds of people" to enter space, U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration head James Fletcher told about 2,000 spectators — including seven members of the "Star Trek" cast — at Rockwell International's space division plant on Friday.

Initial tests of the orbiter are scheduled for early next year with the first space flight planned for March 1979. Unlike previous spacecraft, it is designed to make at least 100 round trips into space before overhaul. Trips will last between seven and 30 days.

The shuttle takes off vertically, using the power of two rocket boosters that separate and are recovered after parachuting to earth. It flies in an orbit around earth and returns to ground in a glide, landing on wheels like an airplane.

The orbiter is flown by a commander, a pilot and a flight engineer who sit before an array of instruments in a cockpit resembling that of an airliner.

They will have hammocks for sleeping, a kitchen area with cooking facilities and a small refrigerator for the concentrated foods.



Rockwell International's space division in Palmdale, California, gave 2,000 invited guests a preview peek at its new $5b. space shuttle on Friday. The reusable space craft will begin carrying "commuters" into earth orbit in the 1980s. (AP radiophoto)

The shuttle will be used to carry satellites into orbit without costly individual launchings — perhaps more than one at a time. It will also recover and repair defective satellites and is planned as the vehicle for putting Spacelab, a European space station, into orbit on the shuttle's eighth flight — in July or August 1980.

It may also carry other spaceships which will be sent into interplanetary trajectories to probe farther reaches of space.

Nasa estimates the orbiter will replace 21 of 22 launch systems now being used. It can carry 30,000 kilos of cargo in a payload bay 20 metres long and 5 metres across.

The cost of the eight-year shuttle development programme was estimated at $5.2b (AP)

Congress passes b

WASHINGTON. — Congress has dealt the first of two heavy blows aimed at the Arab boycott of Israel and blackmail of Jewish-owned or managed companies. And its second blow is soon to follow.

On President Ford's desk is the omnibus Tax Reform Act passed by both Houses on Thursday that includes provisions denying tax benefits to American companies that comply with economic blackmail demands by Arab countries. Despite intense opposition from the Administration, oil corporations and overseas contractors to the provisions, the President is expected to sign the legislation within the next few days. It is to go into effect 30 days after his signature makes it law.

MOSCOW. — In speaking out for Soviet Jews, the American presidential candidates are meddling in other people's business while forgetting about worse problems at home, "Pravda" said yesterday.

In the sharpest Soviet criticism yet of the two nominees, the Communist party newspaper reacted to the release on Thursday of letters from both candidates reaffirming their support for human rights and free emigration in the Soviet Union.

Competing for the support of "Zionist circles," "Pravda" said, President Gerald Ford and his opponent, Jimmy Carter, are "stirring up the obviously invented and non-existent 'Jewish question' in the USSR where citizens of all nationalities enjoy equal rights."

Ford and Carter "deliberately shut their eyes to racial discrimination, lawlessness and the flouting of civil rights in the USA itself, which is — and this is well known the world over — part and parcel of the 'American way of life'," "Pravda" said.

To storm or not? That is the question

By JIM MUIR

BEIRUT. — THERE ARE clear signs that the Syrians and Christians may still launch another major military blow against the Palestinians and leftists in Lebanon so that the new Lebanese President will be faced by fait accompli when he takes over next Thursday.

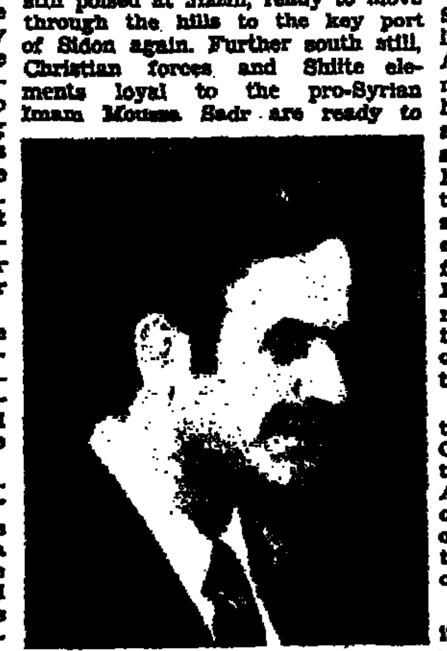
The signs pointing to war are numerous. Palestinian sources say that their latest contacts with the Syrians — through Fatah representatives in Damascus — show no change at all in the "crippling conditions" posed by the Syrians for any form of dialogue with the Palestinians or the leftist allies. These sources say that the latest semi-secret contacts show no serious Syrian willingness at all for dialogue, settlements, solutions or other shilly-shallying.

The same basic message came through from the visits to Damascus last week by the two strongmen of the Maronite Right, Phalangist leader Pierre Jemayyel and National Liberal chief Camille Chamoun.

"Lebanon is determined to liberate every inch of its territory," Chamoun declared. After Jemayyel's visit, Phalangist sources rated a Syrian military move as "probable rather than possible," and said that neither they nor the Syrians took the latest Arab League-sponsored peace plan seriously.

As for military plans and preparations, they are there to be activated when and if the politicians decide that zero hour has come. Syrian and Christian forces in the north are clustered around the encircled port of Tripoli. In central Lebanon, Palestinian-leftist positions in the mountains are sandwiched between the Christians to the west and the Syrians are at Sofar and elsewhere, to the east.

Further south, Syrian forces are still poised at Jizzin, ready to move through the hills to the key port of Sidon again. Further south still, Christian forces and Shiite elements loyal to the pro-Syrian Imam Mousa Sadr are ready to "liberate" the south from the Pales*tinians and leftists when zero hour* comes, according to the Phalangists. The Syrian Chief of Staff and military intelligence boss Hikmat Shehabi has visited Syrian forces in the eastern Beqaa valley along with air force chief Naji Jamil.



Assad

All points to the likelihood of an imminent Syrian-Christian strike. The Phalangists say it would take place either before President-elect Elias Sarkis takes office on Thursday or it would begin on that day. The job would be finished in five to seven days, they add.

Now come the contradictions. Some high Palestinian leaders believe that for electoral reasons the Americans have called a halt to more Syrian action in Lebanon, and back political action to achieve the same results. Informed Palestinian sources also say that the Soviets have given them assurances that the Syrians will now only fight in self-defence — a fact which could explain Pravda's slap on the wrist for "extremist elements" in the Palestinian and leftist movements recently. A darker view would say that the Kremlin wanted to leap off the sinking ship before its prestige went down with it.

Then there is the relaxation in tension between Damascus and Cairo over Lebanon. Does it mean that the two have agreed that the Arab mediation should step in — or that the Americans have leaned on Cairo to let the Syrians finish the job before Kissinger is turfed out by the Presidential elections?

The only certainty is that whether it is through political or military warfare, the future is not going to be easy for the embattled Palestinians and leftists. The schizophrenia with which even the most seasoned observers here read the political future could stem from the fact that the decision-makers in Damascus and elsewhere are themselves in two minds over what to do. Marxist Aden looks to the Moslem Eden

By PETER HELLYER

ABU DHABI. — A DRAMATIC transformation of political alignment has taken place not only in Lebanon but also within the Arabian peninsula.

A recent announcement by the Abu Dhabi Fund for Arab Economic Development (ADFAED) stated that it has granted another loan to the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, even though no formal diplomatic relations exist between South Yemen and the United Arab Emirates.

Once the revolutionary Marxist outcast, supporting groups trying to overthrow the established governments in the rest of the peninsula, South Yemen has embarked on a successful round of fence-mending.

This has ended the hostility its neighbours once felt towards it, and meant that for the first time South Yemen is receiving substantial amounts from the oil-rich Arab states to boost its economic development.

South Yemen, which controls the Red Sea gateway of Bab el-Mandeb, was until 1967 the British protectorate of Aden. Achieving independence after a long struggle during which the traditional sheikhs, sultans and sherifs who had collaborated with the British were overthrown, South Yemen has for years given political and logistical support to exile groups from the Yemen Arab Republic (North Yemen), Saudi Arabia, the Gulf states and in particular the Popular Front for the Liberation of Oman, which has been fighting in the Dhofar province of Oman for more than a decade. In return, the North Yemenis, the Saudis, and the Omanis have supported South Yemeni exiles, in many cases closing a blind eye to cross-border attacks, if not actually helping to organise them.

Now, however, the hostile activities of both sides have been scaled down, and the oil-rich states have begun to give aid and to improve their relations with South Yemen. The first initiatives came from Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates.

With both states feeling less threatened by South Yemeni support of exile activity, and keen to use their oil wealth to boost development even in Arab states with which they had political disagreements, they were the natural choices to begin the process of reconciliation. Even though no formal diplomatic relations existed, the Kuwaiti and Abu Dhabi aid funds began to extend assistance to the Marxist regime in Aden, at the same time lending their good offices to the attempts by the Arab League to resolve the quarrel between South Yemen and neighbouring Oman over the former's support for the PFLO.

This year, the process has developed dramatically, with the Saudi Arabians burying the hatchet with their southern neighbours, extending aid and granting formal diplomatic recognition for the first time.

The reasons for the diplomatic turn-around are several. First of all, the PFLO campaign in Oman has received substantial setbacks as a result of the involvement of a large Iranian task-force on the side of the Sultan Qabus.

Omani government claims that the insurgency is over may be exaggerated, but the South Yemenis seem to have accepted that the PFLO can no longer win the military victory over the Sultan that seemed possible only a few years ago.

Secondly, the other states in the peninsula seem to have come to accept, at least in part, South Yemeni fears about the continued Iranian presence in Oman.

In the light of the Iranian military build-up in the Gulf, there is scarcely disguised concern in Gulf Foreign Ministries about Iranian geo-political intentions in the region — a concern that has not been allayed by the extreme sensitivity of Iran to the use of the name "Arabian" Gulf by the Arab states.

The South Yemenis themselves have been more ready to compromise too. They have faced a serious economic crisis ever since independence, and even though the re-opening of the Suez Canal has brought some more trade to the port of Aden, the economic problems remain unsolved. Arab assistance seemed to offer a possible way-out.

The Marxist leaders in Aden, while retaining their own ideology as far as internal affairs are concerned, have apparently come to accept that the heady optimism of the past about the potential instability of some of the other states in the peninsula was both inaccurate and outdated. A more realistic assessment of the strength of their neighbours has been made.

The results of the diplomatic rapprochement are already visible. South Yemen is now receiving the financial aid she so badly needs, and with the scaling down of Saudi support, or tacit support, for exile groups, its armed forces are no longer as stretched as in the past.

The only state in the peninsula that remains to a considerable extent outside the new circle of friendship is Oman. The "revolutionary" campaign in Dhofar has suffered severe defeats, but the government of Sultan Qabus still feels unable to dispense with its military existence from Iran and Britain, as well as Jordan. And while the British presence is, to some extent, tolerated by the country's neighbours, Iran's intentions are still mistrusted.

Externally, at least as far as the peninsula is concerned, South Yemen is no longer the radical centre it used to be. It "has stopped trying to export revolution to the rest of the peninsula," as one Arab official puts it.

But in the face of the perceived external geo-political fear of Iran, all of the governments in the peninsula, apart from Oman, have consciously chosen to try to mend their fences. It is a process that on both sides would have seemed almost inconceivable, a few years ago. (Gemini)

An interim accord sought between Egypt and the Arabs

By JONATHAN SHARP

CAIRO. — IT IS NOW one year and three weeks since Egypt and Israel signed their Sinai interim accord, and bored troops of the United Nations peace-keeping force patrol truce lines which are more tranquil than at any time in the long Arab-Israeli struggle. But behind these lines on the Egyptian side, bitter words are flying as thickly as 1973 bullets of the Sinai desert, and most of the barrages are aimed not at Israel but at Egypt's own allies.

It was noteworthy that Egypt allowed the first anniversary of that Sinai accord to pass by without mention, possibly recalling the vilification that the agreement itself drew from so much of the Arab world.

The current feuds have long passed beyond the relatively straight-forward disputes over Middle East strategy or, to put it crudely, how the will of tens of millions of Arabs can prevail over that of three million Israelis.

Egypt now does daily verbal battle with neighbouring Libya over a long list of differences, shrilly attacking Colonel Mua'mmer Gaddafi as "Libya's madman" and accusing Libya of responsibility for recent bomb outrages and the abortive hijack of a tourist-filled Egyptian airliner.

Libya, rejecting all charges, replies in the same tone and even threatened at one stage to break all diplomatic ties with Egypt — a far cry from the days several years ago when the two countries pledged to join in a single federated state.

Egypt is also quarrelling with Syria, the third country in the ill-starred union, with Cairo hitting out at Syrian intervention in Lebanon, itself a horrendous example of the failure of Arab to live with Arab.

Syria is also denounced by Palestinians and Lebanese leftists, who charge that the Syrians are supporting the mainly Christian Lebanese rightists in the devastating and brutalising war that shows little sign of easing after 17 months and over 40,000 lives. Syria is also at odds with its neighbour Iraq, with the two countries ruled by rival factions of the Baath party.

There are also continuing rumblings between Algeria on the one hand and Morocco and Mauritania on the other, over the former Spanish Sahara.

In all, the Arab world, already a byword for disharmony, has rarely appeared to be in such disarray Thus few people were expecting much when Arab Foreign Ministers and senior officials met at the Arab League headquarters ear*lier this month to begin discussion* on a Kuwaiti proposal for an Arab summit on Lebanon.

The idea seemed hopelessly unrealistic, and Egypt was already canvassing support for a less ambitious mini-summit with only countries closely involved in the Lebanese tragedy taking part.

It came as something of a minor bombshell when Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmi emerged from the conference hall and announced to newsmen that unanimous agreement had been reached on holding a full-dress summit now set for October 18. But after digesting the unlikely prospect of leaders such as Egypt's Anwar Sadat, Syria's Hafez al-Assad and Colonel Gaddafi all coming to Cairo to talk together in the same conference hall, most observers stuck to their original view that the current climate still made a full-scale summit a remote proposition. This opinion seemed to be reinforced by a Baghdad radio report that Iraq was against the summit while Syrian forces were still inside Lebanon.

There is also scepticism over exactly what an Arab summit could achieve in Lebanon, where the patent failure of Arab nations to come up with an effective joint policy must weigh heavily on the consciences of Arab leaders. Arab countries are presumably hoping that the Lebanese crisis will have worked itself out to some extent by next week.

This hope is based on the scheduled handover of power by right-wing President Suleiman Franjieh to his elected successor, the Syrian-backed Elias Sarkis, on Thursday. However, several Arab diplomats have voiced the gloomy view that a presidential succession is becoming increasingly irrelevant in a situation when the niceties of Lebanese constitution have long been discarded by the fighting factions.

There are even gloomier forecasts that, in the long-term, the Lebanese war might prove the crucible for a military showdown between conservative and radical Arab states, with Israel, which has already been reported in the western press to be helping the Lebanese right with a view to weakening the Palestinians, as the gratified spectator.

One inescapable fact is that in the midst of this seething kaleidoscope of inter-Arab differences, the erstwhile Arab preoccupation of confronting Israel has been to some extent relegated to the background. Consequently there is little talk here at least of the possibility of reviving the Geneva conference on the Middle East: most Arab countries are simply too busy with strictly Arab affairs.

One imponderable factor in the complex mosaic of Arab relations sounds only semi-serious but is one which many Arabs take seriously: that policies in the Arab world never stick for long and that a surprising about-face by one party or another is always in the offing. Would, for example, anyone have believed a year ago that the Syrians, the closest supporters, political mentors and main arms suppliers of the Palestinians, now be fighting them?

Similarly, does anyone believe now that the Palestinians, by an extraordinary mental somersault, may try and come to terms with Israel?

That also seems far-fetched. But it did not stop one senior Palestinian leader at a recent private party in Cairo from loudly proclaiming that the Palestinians should make peace with the Israelis. After all, many Palestinians having been chased out of Jordan in 1971 and now being hounded in Lebanon, must be wondering about their supposed friendship with the Arab world.

In Lebanon, Palestinians are already openly cynical about the expressions of verbal support they get from, for example, Egypt. Conversely, several Arab states nominally supporting the Palestinians do little to hide their impatience with them, and regard them as constant trouble-makers when much of the Arab world, particularly those with oil wealth, want to concentrate their attention on economic and social development. Youth copying debased fashions of the West

Khaled warns Saudis of foreign habits

RIYADH. — KING KHALED of Saudi Arabia warned his subjects Friday against adopting "debased and unethical" ways brought into the kingdom by foreigners. "We must make sure of our Islamic traditions and get rid of imported customs," Khaled said in a statement broadcast over his official radio.

The monarch, whose kingdom is among the richest and most conservative in the world, reminded foreigners they also must abide by Islam's strictures while in Saudi Arabia. "They should take on Saudi ways, because we Saudis will never assimilate theirs," he added.

Foreigners in the Kingdom, mostly oil workers and diplomats, live almost entirely segregated from Saudis. Within their enclaves, they can follow Western customs. The Saudi government also recently allowed foreign women to drive cars, a privilege denied Saudi women.

The King is the official guardian of Islam's holiest shrine at Mecca. He seemed particularly dismayed that Saudi youth and women could throw off their forefathers' religious rules. "Among the imported traditions is women wearing indecent clothes when they go to market, contrary to Islamic character," he said. "And our young generation mimics crazes and fashions in the West that can only be described as debased and unethical."

Khaled declared he has ordered a religious group "The Advocates of Virtues and Dissuaders of Vices," to take "all measures necessary to stamp out these violations of religious teaching."

Saudi police compel Saudis to abide by Koranic prescriptions, forcing shopkeepers to close down during evening prayers, for example, or banning women in short skirts from the streets.

WARNING
We hereby inform our customers, that food mixers are being imported into the country by various individuals that have no ties with the manufacturer and lack the original parts to properly service these appliances.
We, as the only official agents in Israel of the KENWOOD company, with a stock of proper spare parts and modern service centers, warn our customers that they should only buy mixers with a company warranty attached (a green card with our trademark), and should make sure that the serial number on the mixer's underside matches that printed on the warranty, to save much unnecessary aggravation.
No other mixer can claim our guarantee.
Buying a mixer is an investment for a long period, therefore it is important that it has the original manufacturer's guarantee attached, for proper service by our company.
In case of doubt, we can give you additional information. Call: 03-613636 any day from 8.00 a.m. — 1.00 p.m.

position was very com- to the fact that one does to sit with arms out- position the body a comfortable distance from pedals and controls. Full points go to Fiat for the ventilation system which is far superior to previous Fiats I've tested. The 131 system is excellent, two adjustable vents at each end of the instrument panel plus two additional adjustable central ducts that allow cold and heated air to be mixed.

I found the 1600 cc. wagon engine very flexible and eager to rev up and get going. Engine noise level was fairly low, helped by the thermostatically controlled fan plus a well spaced gear range.

Driving at an illegal speed of 160 km./h., the car's maximum speed, proved to be surprisingly relaxing and I constantly had to check myself and return to a safer speed.

The brakes feel quite progressive, nice and light in operation but not over-sensitive. I was very impressed the way the 131 stopped from 130 km./h., not skidding and dancing all over the road. Compared to other wagons I've driven and tested the steering is much more responsive and accurate.

DRIVING AT HIGH SPEED

High speed stability is very good but I found side winds slightly affected the handling. Driving alone I felt a bit of understeer, but as the family wagon is made for a family understeer is necessary to balance the car when it's fully loaded. The suspension proved a bit soft on bumpy surfaces.

Fuel consumption was surprisingly light on the high speed section but a bit disappointing in the city (probably could be sorted out with correct tuning).

In summing up, my 131 wagon was extremely reliable and comfortable (after the front seat anchor was fixed twice). A badly hung front door which I feel should have been picked up at pre-delivery service was annoying.

Overall fuel consumption: 8.9 litre per 100 km. The gearbox after driving 50 km. was making mildly hard noises. In braking, the Fiat set a high standard. An impressive basic tool kit is supplied with the 131. I feel with a bit more attention given to the pre-delivery service inspection this car, modestly priced, roomy and comfortable, and what really counts, practical, is the station wagon to consider when buying your car.

The basic price of the 1300 wagon according to the Mediterranean Car Company (Fiat Israel) is to olim, IL34,250 plus 25 per cent duty, plus VAT. Annual licence IL910. The price, with taxes, is IL98,900, plus VAT.

Brokers said investors drew some encouragement for their late-week rally from a drop in the U.S. money supply last week.

Although such a drop is often considered a negative factor signifying a tighter money supply and possibly higher interest rates, investors saw it as a plus, brokers said. The drop raised some hopes that the Federal Reserve will loosen its monetary policy to speed up the economic recovery, now apparently stalled, they said.

On Friday, the government announced that housing starts in August were 11 per cent higher than in July and 22 per cent higher than last year. Brokers said it was good news for the depressed housing market and for the economy.

On the New York Stock Exchange this past week, there were 263 new yearly highs and 46 new yearly lows.

Car accidents up in August

In August, 67 people lost their lives in traffic accidents; in July, the number was 41, the Central Bureau of Statistics reports.

Since the beginning of the year there have been 408 traffic fatalities, compared to 392 at the end of August 1975, an increase of 16.

The 1,361 accidents registered by police in August constitute a 14 per cent increase over July. The percentage increase is even greater for the number of injured, which rose 22 per cent to stand at 2,069. The Bureau spokesman said that according to the "seasonality," that is, the forecast based on the record of previous years, August should have seen a seven per cent drop over July in accidents and injured.

In the administered areas there were 14 fatalities.

Price freeze

In a move to stem inflation, already near 11 per cent, the Swedish Government has frozen prices on passenger cars.

Both Volvo and Saab had applied for 1 to 4 per cent increases and other firms, including foreign automakers, were asking a 3 to 5 per cent hike. The Ministry of Trade's order came on the heels of 6 to 7 per cent increases on most models earlier this year.

Car prices in Sweden have increased almost 20 per cent in the past three years: a standard-shift Volvo 244 sedan now costs about $15,000 (IL124,000) and a Volkswagen Rabbit more than $11,300. (IL93,000)

Electronic ignition gives your car better kilometrage

By BRIAN ABER
Special to The Jerusalem Post

Why change your car to electronic ignition? Once you have the answer to that question clear in your mind, a good "pointless" ignition makes a great deal of sense.

Why scrap (or, rather, pension off onto "reserve") the simple and reliable Kettering ignition system fitted to your car by its makers, in favour of a "little black box" which, with its accessories and adapters will cost about IL900.-?

Once you arrive at the answers to this question, you can evaluate whether it's worthwhile, in your case.

Let us say straight out, that we don't believe it's a worthwhile project at all, if you install a kit which includes a "black box" but retains the mechanical contact breaker. Even if the points are only used to handle a micro current, and are thus freed from the ravages of arcing and burning, they are still subject to mechanical wear — which changes the gap setting, upsets the dwell and varies the ignition timing.

Provided it's efficient and reliable, a "pointless" ignition system has obvious advantages: the primary switching becomes an electronic function, not subject to mechanical wear and tear or the distortions which plague the conventional contact breaker. So once it has been correctly set, the need for regular maintenance is virtually eliminated.

However, in practice the Kettering ignition system fitted to most modern cars is cheap and quite efficient. It is extremely reliable and easy to adjust and repair if it goes wrong: you can fix it yourself, on the road if need be. And if a spare part is needed, it's obtainable anywhere at low cost. On the other hand the system needs a little fussing over. The points must be aligned, gapped, cleaned and periodically replaced. The cam must be lubed and the condenser must also be replaced at infrequent intervals. But almost anyone can understand it and work on it and so long as your car has one, your possible dependance on expert assistance (or, more likely, on a sophisticated and expensive replacement "black box") is that much less.

Why, then, have American manufacturers "gone electronic" so strongly over the last two years?

The most important reason was that they had to comply with anti-pollution regulations which demanded efficient combustion over long periods of service. With a conventional ignition system, this could have been achieved only by ensuring frequent and regular tune ups. With a "pointless" electronic system, both timing and dwell remain constant.

The viewpoint of the motorist considering modifying his car to electronic ignition is, we argue, substantially similar. His ordinary ignition will do all he requires it to do, provided he keeps it in trim. But by going electronic he can a) avoid the need to reset and replace the points and the condenser and b) avoid the gradual "drifting" of his ignition timing between tune ups. He can thus maintain his car's basic tune at a constant level, eliminating the fall-off in efficiency which is an inevitable feature of the Kettering system.

If you study the cost of running an ordinary car, you will find that where the ignition system is serviced at intervals of, say 10,000 km., there will be a detectable loss of tune in the 5,000-6,000 km. preceding each tune up. The engine will feel slightly flat and the detailed records will show that the litres/100 km. figure strays upwards, probably by 3-4 per cent.

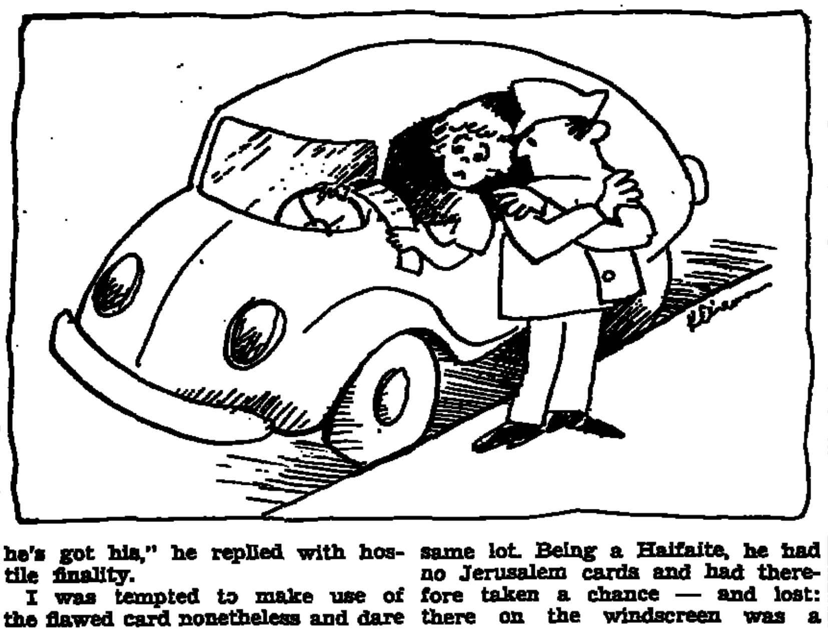
With a good pointless ignition, you still suffer some loss of performance as such components as plugs, ignition leads and distributor rotor/cap deteriorate. But this is usually a much slower process. The big dips in your efficiency graph will be eliminated.

When planning to test electronic ignition kits, we rejected several offers of systems which retained the conventional contact points. We were convinced that the possible gains would be so minimal they'd be out of sight.

The Post will soon be testing kits that are locally available.

Pink parking tickets blowing in the breeze

By RUTH CONNELL ROBERTSON
Jerusalem Post Reporter



Tel Aviv and Haifa car-owners have been used for quite a time to the cards they have to put in their windows at certain designated parking places.

The system has only recently been adopted in Jerusalem, and it was not more than a few weeks ago that I discovered — to the tune of a IL40 fine — that the blue-and-white stripes appearing on curbs in many streets in the centre of the city were not an outbreak of chauvinist fever but indications of pay parking zones.

But I still haven't quite got the hang of the way the cards work, and the other day, having pulled out what I hoped were the correct three slivers of pasteboard, I was pleased (for once) to see a city traffic warden approaching: here was my chance to get authoritative instruction.

He began civilly enough to explain the system, but suddenly noticed that I had pulled off the wrong time tab so that instead of my parking period starting at four o'clock, it finished then. And as it was now five minutes past the hour, my card, he said was useless.

Couldn't I pull out the correct tab and stick the card in the window? After all, he had seen me drive up and knew that I wasn't trying a fiddle.

Oh no, that was against his instructions. Besides, supposing an*other warden came along? He would* certainly give me a ticket.

Well, then, couldn't he write a note of authorization to put alongside the card?

"I've got my responsibilities and he's got his," he replied with hostile finality.

I was tempted to make use of the flawed card nonetheless and dare him to give me a ticket so that I could fight this petty bureaucracy through the courts. But who has the time and the patience for this sort of public-spirited campaign? And besides, hadn't a traffic police officer once warned me that if I decided to dispute a violation charge and came up before a magistrate in a bad mood, I was likely to find it far more expensive than paying the fine without a peep.

So I junked the original card and wasted 60 agorot on a new one.

But revenge was, for once, as swift as it was sweet, if vicarious. The very next day I happened to be meeting a friend for lunch, and discovered when we had finished that he had parked his car in the same lot. Being a Haifaite, he had no Jerusalem cards and had therefore taken a chance — and lost: there on the windscreen was a pink parking ticket.

"What do I do with this," he asked in some dudgeon.

"Well," I said, "if it were a police ticket, I'd say you'd better pay the fine and be done with it. But it's only a city one, and I don't know how far the Municipality chases non-Jerusalemites. And it's a very breezy day, so the thing could easily have blown away before you saw it...."

He got the message, and let the slip of paper flutter to the ground.

"Hi," I said, "you wouldn't do that in Haifa. Pick it up and put it tidily in that trash can.

"And," I added, "tear it into shreds first. You can never be too careful."

Inventor of 'cat's eyes' dies

HALIFAX, England. — Percy Shaw, the Briton who invented "cat's eye" road studs for driving at night, died here this month at the age of 86.

The idea, which he got while driving through fog in 1933, made him a millionaire many times over. Last year he complained he was paying tax on his income at the rate of 97.5 per cent.

At one time, Shaw used to navigate through murk and fog with the aid of light reflected from tram tracks in this city, 200 m (330 km.) north of London. He got the "cat's eye" idea when the tramtracks were removed. His first experimental lenses came from a reflecting road sign that he "vandalized," according to his nephew. (UPI)

The 1976 'Allon Plan'

ISRAEL'S CABINET MINISTERS have earned a reputation of voicing political statements which do not necessarily correspond with officially approved Government policy. Moreover, a good number of our Ministers often tend to attract public attention on their views regarding foreign policy and defence issues, rather than on matters which are strictly within the province of their respective Ministries.

As a result, the Government and the Prime Minister often find themselves completely taken by surprise, to the extent of political embarrassment, by utterances of various Cabinet Ministers. One such blatant case is certainly last week's publication of the revised "Allon Plan" by the Deputy Premier and Foreign Minister in the current issue of the prestigious "Foreign Affairs" magazine.

Questioned in a television interview whether he had cleared publication of his article with the Prime Minister, Mr. Yigal Allon said that this had not been necessary in this case, since, in his view, his plan did not exceed accepted Government decisions, stressing that this was within his authority. Be that as it may, it is quite inconceivable that a major political initiative by Israel, such as proposing the territorial outlines for a future peace settlement, should come about through the personal, totally uncoordinated decision of one senior Cabinet Minister, even if he holds the rank of Deputy Premier and Foreign Minister.

It is impossible for any outsider to distinguish between official Government policy and the personal views of Israel's Foreign Minister. If there is one thing a Cabinet Minister has to give up, that is his right to make public his personal views on major policy issues without proper prior clearance by the Government.

Mr. Allon's supporters could argue that the basic ingredients of the plan, named after him, had been public knowledge for several years now, in fact ever since he submitted it to the Government in July 1967, shortly after the Six Day War, when he was Minister of Labour. Moreover, the "Allon Plan" had served as a guideline for the siting of Israel settlements along the Jordan River in the West Bank, as well as in Sinai and on the Golan Heights.

Nevertheless, all governments since 1967 have deliberately refrained from taking any decision on Mr. Allon's proposals. The purpose of this policy was to avoid premature internal debate, as well as the wish not to precipitate a rushed Arab rejection of a reasonable territorial compromise. Reports of earlier rejections by King Hussein of the "Allon Plan," when the Jordanian monarch was sounded out by Israel leaders, should have served as further proof that any new and serious initiative in this direction ought to have been properly prepared and placed in the context of peace negotiations between Israel and Jordan.

The ill timing of Mr. Allon's publication of his plan has only served to embarrass even staunch supporters of territorial compromise as advocated by the Foreign Minister. Moreover, it has brought immediate and reinforced rejection of the plan by the Arabs who were as much taken by surprise by its publication as were Israel's Government leaders.

The entire exercise has thus proved to have been counterproductive, hurting the chances of even partial approval of the "Allon Plan" by both its opponents in Israel and the more moderate Arab leadership. If there is merit in some new political initiative by Israel, involving even the sensitive area of the West Bank, Mr. Allon's move has only served to postpone it indefinitely, rather than forcing the issue.

But what has been hurt even more, is what remains of the Government's team spirit. By publishing a major policy statement of his own on the eve of his departure for the UN Assembly in New York, Mr. Allon has only served to point up the internal disarray of Israel's Government.

HA'ARETZ (independent): "Judging by recent events in Lebanon and the Arab capitals, the evaluation may be reached that the inter-Lebanese and (the related) inter-Arab conflicts... are not yet ripe for resolution. This could lead to the conclusion that there is still time to continue with the 'good fence' efforts, that ought to give their fruits in the long range."

HATZOFE (National Religious), after roundly condemning UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, notes: "This year, as in previous years, the UN Assembly majority will (presumably) devote itself to criticizing 'Palestinian-persecuting' Israel, disregarding the massacre of Palestinians in Lebanon — and possibly even demand Israel's suspension from the Assembly. The split Arab world, inflaming the fighting in Lebanon, will present a united front in the Assembly against 'racist Israel.' The Israeli delegation will undoubtedly give clear expression to what distinguishes Israel's Arabs — secure as long as they do not engage in terrorism — from the Arabs in Lebanon who are locked in mutual slaughter, in great measure through the fault of the Palestinian terrorists."

MOSHE DAYAN 'Story of My Life'

D-DAY of the Six Day War, June 5, 1967. H-hour, 0745.

At 7.30 a.m. I was in the Air Force Command Post. The tension was almost tangible. Not an eye moved from the war table, not an ear from the radio network. When our aircraft reached their targets and it became clear that they had not been detected, a stone — just one, but of agonizing weight — rolled off the heart. The opening move had succeeded. The planes began their bombing runs, and Southern Command received the coded order for "Action." Our armour, too, began moving.

Within an hour the pilots' reports began coming in: hundreds of enemy planes destroyed, most of them on the ground. Surface-to-air missile sites had also been destroyed or put out of action. Only rarely was a plane of ours hit. So, we had crushed the enemy's air strength; but this was only part of the enemy's armed might, and our tanks had not yet encountered the Egyptian armour. Nevertheless, within a few moments the nightmare of the previous weeks had vanished. True, the war had only just begun; but it was the kind of start which augured well for the remaining phases...

Our attack on Egypt's air bases was carried out in two waves. In the first, between the hours of 7.14 and 8.55 a.m., our aircraft attacked 11 Egyptian airfields, destroyed 197 enemy aircraft (189 on the ground and eight in aerial battle), rendered six air bases inoperable and put 16 radar stations out of action. In the second wave, they attacked 14 airfields and destroyed 107 enemy aircraft.

Our casualties in both waves were 11 pilots — six killed, two taken prisoner and three wounded — and we lost nine planes. Six were hit, but returned safely and could be repaired. Altogether, the Egyptians that morning lost three quarters of their air strength — 304 of their 419 warplanes.

The operation of the first wave went off exactly as planned, and the considerations underlying the planning turned out to be correct. H-hour had been set for 7.45 on the assumption that at that hour the senior Egyptian officers would be on their way from home to headquarters. This proved right. Flying at low altitude and maintaining radio silence brought our aircraft to their targets undetected. The order for radio silence was so strict that it was not to be broken even in the event of a crash or the abandonment of an aircraft; and the maximum altitude allowed any plane was extremely low.

The briefing to wing commanders was given by the Commander of the Air Force, Maj. Gen. Motti (Mordechai) Hod, in the afternoon of the previous day, Sunday, June 4. The wing commanders briefed their squadron leaders that same evening, at 8 p.m. And next morning the pilots were awakened at 3.45 so that they could bone up on the briefing. The first formation to take off made for the Bir Gafgafa air base in Sinai. One minute later the second formation took off for Abu Suweir, west of the Canal. The attack on the El Arish airfield was carried out without bombs so as not to damage the runways. It was presumed that El Arish would be captured in a day or two, and our air force would wish to use it. Through a navigational error one of our formations of four planes reached Cairo's International Airport. There were no military aircraft, so it was left untouched.

At 9.34 the second wave took off. In this one, unlike the first, there was some improvisation and change from the original plan, for now account had to be taken of the results of the first attack wave and possible unexpected developments. There were some airfields where all the aircraft had been destroyed and there was no need for a repeat assault. As against these, some enemy aircraft had succeeded in escaping and landing at other, more distant, airfields which had not been included in the original plan.

BY NOW the Egyptians were on full alert, and at some of the targets our planes met anti-aircraft fire; yet on the whole the conditions were easier this time. The dense pillars of smoke that rose from the bombed airfield helped navigation, and there was now no need to keep radio silence or to fly at dangerously low altitudes.

While our air force was engaged on the Egyptian front, the Syrian, Jordanian and Iraqi air forces began attacking Israel. The Syrians were the first. Twelve Mig-17s took off from Damascus at 11.50. Two of them attacked Kibbutz Degania Alef, setting fire to a silo and poultry run, and then went on to bomb — and miss — a company strongpoint at Beit Yerah, also on Lake Kinneret, and a dam on the River Jordan. Three others attacked an airfield near Megiddo, and one was brought down by the field's anti-aircraft guns. Another flight of three set a haystack and a granary on fire near Kibbutz Ein Hamifratz in the mistaken belief that they were bombing the Haifa oil refineries. The rest strafed and rocketed the convalescent home of Kfar Hahoresh, near Nazareth, damaged buildings and wounded one Jew and one Arab.

The Jordanian air force was the second to go into action, its Hunters taking off at noon and attacking Netanya and the Kfar Syrkin airfield near Petah Tikva. At Syrkin they destroyed a Nord transport plane that was on the ground. Two hours later three Iraqi Hunter planes flew over, sending rockets in the direction of my own settlement of Nahalal, no doubt believing it was the Ramat David airfield. They caused no damage and returned to Iraq.

As soon as the reports came in of Syrian and Jordanian air attacks, Motti ordered his staff to "Plan Syria and Jordan — fast!" Within minutes, eight flight formations who were on their way to hit other targets were diverted in the air to Syrian and Jordanian air bases.

Thus, at 12.15, a third wave of Israel warplanes went into action. The entire Jordanian Air Force of 28 planes was destroyed. Syria lost 53 aircraft out of a total of 112. Iraq lost 10. Our own losses in this third wave were five pilots killed, two wounded and two taken prisoner, and 10 planes.

For the men of our Air Force, this was their day, a long, arduous and hazardous day. By brilliant planning and by daring combat between dawn and sunset, they had assured the successful outcome of the campaign against three countries....

THROUGHOUT the intensive air activity in the morning, I tried to spend as much time as possible in the air force command post. Motti and his senior staff officers sat in the front row facing a glass partition, and I sat just behind them. There was continuous chatter from the signals equipment, with the receiving of information and transmission of orders. And there was the constant movement of duty officers coming and going. Yet all seemed to freeze, all sound to be cut off, at critical moments, allowing Motti to concentrate in silence, to listen, reflect, decide, and issue his fateful orders.

As we followed the pilots' reports, there were lightning changes of mood, silently registered by the expression in everyone's eyes. They shone when we heard: "Shot down Mig," "I'm hit, but okay," or "Returning to base;" and there was sadness at "I'm bailing out" or "Can't see the parachute."

The officers in the command post knew every man in the air, could identify each one of them. The professional jargon was economical, terse, dry. It was their language, the language of their lives, and it gave them a tangible feeling of what was happening in the air battles, as if they themselves were sitting in the cockpit. When things were going well, there was a quick smile; but when a pilot was hit, wounded, bailing out, or landing by parachute and seeking a hiding place in the dunes, behind a shrub or between rocks, their thoughts were with him at every moment. The helicopters, the doctor, and protective fighter planes were sent racing to his help. But it was as though the men in the command post were with him all the time, bound to him by an unbreakable physical link.

I had known Motti for many years, as I had known his predecessors Ezer Weizman and Dan Tolkowski. But Motti and I shared a common background. Motti was also a son of Kibbutz Degania. True, when he was born, I was already with my parents in Nahalal, but the special bond with his family had never been cut. His uncle, Zvi Fein, was a member of Nahalal, and his late father, Yosef, had guided me on the eve of the action in Syria in 1941. Yosef was among the first settlers of Metulla, right on the Lebanese border, and he knew the Arabs, their language, their customs and pattern of living extremely well. He was also a close friend of many Arab families in Galilee, in Syria and Lebanon.

In the long nights we had spent together, when I was preparing myself for my mission, he had instructed me in the "do's and don'ts" — and above all in the "when to believe and when not to believe" — when going on a joint operation with Arabs. Before the Allied incursion into Syria, I went on night reconnaissance across the border together with an Arab guide, and Motti's father was fearful of what might happen if I were caught. If all went smoothly, he said, and I remained undetected, the Arab would not give me away. But if I got into trouble, who knew what he might do?

Now, in the command post, watching Motti drink jugful after jugful of water, as he followed his pilots with deep anxiety on their bombing runs over the enemy air bases, I could not help recalling the figure of his father, standing on a hillock on the northern border, anxiously waiting till dawn for my return from a Syrian night patrol.....

THE QUESTION "who fired the first shot" was put to me at 8.30 that morning by a member of the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Security Committee. I had reluctantly left the air command for a short while and met them at Sde Dov, the Tel Aviv air strip. They were there waiting to emplane for a tour of the northern front, which had been arranged the previous week. I had not cancelled it, so as not to arouse speculation and jeopardize secrecy. Now, when I saw them, I read them the announcement put out by the army spokesman shortly before: "As of this morning, stiff fighting is in progress between Egyptian air and armoured forces advancing towards Israel and our forces who have gone out to stop them." I then briefed them on the morning's events...

MOTOR INSURANCE LEGISLATION

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — With reference to the new Road Accident Victims Compensation Law, we wish to point out that the Finance Committee of the Knesset, when approving premium increases of about 50 per cent was supplied with rather dubious assumptions made by the Supervisor of Insurance which were worked out together with the interested insurance companies. To the best of our knowledge, the new premium tariff was not based on any real statistical evidence either in Israel or outside of Israel. Furthermore the Supervisor of Insurance has been unwilling to provide us with information concerning the statistical method in which the compatibility of the new tariff to actual conditions will be followed up.

We also feel that the scaled earnings-linked benefit which will be paid to any victim within 60 days from the date of the accident will provide the ideal situation for the victim to hold out for unreasonable benefits whilst receiving a monthly compensation. We believe that this situation will lead to less compromises and more court cases than at present. We believe that the answer to this problem will only come about when the law will be changed to require compulsory arbitration before bringing the matter before the courts.

POSTSCRIPTS

ONE OF the nicer stories written to us recently comes from Matya Shuval of Bat Yam:

"After 26 years of the existence of the Jewish State, my first cousin, Tanya, and her family arrived here from Russia. My husband and I had come from the U.S. in 1947. I never dreamed that I, my family's only representative in Israel, would become part of a Jewish homeland that would absorb my own relatives from Russia. It seemed a miracle... the first of two.

"Peter Winetraub, Tanya's husband, had been a well-known television director in Leningrad. His mother, Sofia, was blind. I tried to find out what was the cause of her blindness. Communication was difficult between us; there was no common language. I understood that Sofia was old and blind and that nothing could be done about her condition.

"Within two weeks of her arrival, however Sofia had been taken by the Jewish Agency free of charge, to the Hadassah Hospital for an examination by eye specialists and an eye operation was scheduled for her within the month. I could not understand how in the Soviet Union the operation on Sofia's eyes was not possible. I asked Peter in my Hebrew and halting Yiddish plus hand signals. I was appalled at the answer.

"He said that it is true that the medical profession is well advanced in Russia but a cataract operation is not performed on old people, as they would not live much longer anyway.

"When the bandages were removed after Sophia's operation, she could see after two years of darkness. She sees her family again, her new homeland, and now she even studies Hebrew at an ulpan for the elderly. Sofia tells me, in Hebrew, that she is the best pupil in the class.

"This was the second miracle."
